

XanEdu CoursePacks for the School of Education

What if one of your students were forced to teach in a class without any tools? No textbooks, no worksheets, no computers. Nothing. While your program may have prepared her with the skills to succeed in the most challenging classroom, that's a scenario no teacher ever wants to face.

More than in any other discipline, School of Education faculty and staff understand the importance of supplemental materials for the classroom that engage and intrigue. Your department's reputation relies in part on its ability to offer up-to-date learning tools tailored to fit the curriculum, while at the same time not straining student budgets.

And more often than not, there is no single textbook which can provide the appropriate materials for individual Education classes. That's where custom CoursePacks from XanEdu enter the picture.

Engaging and Relevant Content Tailored To Your Class

Perhaps you have found chapters from SAGE textbooks or journal articles from NAEYC particularly effective. We can get that content for your XanEdu CoursePack. Education standards, especially state and NCLB, are a must for many courses. We can get those, too. What about multimedia content, like videos on YouTube or shows from PBS? Yes, we can even include those. And whether from traditional sources or the latest, most up-to-the-minute media, you and your department administrators can rest assured that all of the content has been legally obtained.

From Rutgers to Stanford, XanEdu has been providing custom CoursePacks for over ten years to hundreds of campuses nationwide. Our agreements with publishers and content providers all over the world, as well as our relationship with the Copyright Clearance Center, ensure that we can build relevant, cost-effective, and legal CoursePacks for students that include virtually any supplemental materials.

"From the initial creation all the way through to student access, XanEdu makes the entire course pack process very easy."

Copyright Clearance

XanEdu Protects You and Your Reputation

Last semester, you may have required students to view a video on the Web. Or perhaps you made multiple copies of a journal article from the university library and distributed it to a class.

In both instances, you may have been violating copyright and thus breaking the law.

Copyright issues are increasingly complicated, though most understand that it's against the law to copy and distribute current articles and books without the author or publisher's permission. But did you know that much of the content seemingly available for "free" on the internet also falls under the same conditions? Or that making multiple copies of content from your library may also violate the terms under which the university paid for those published works? In both these scenarios, content that is free for individual use may not be so for wider distribution in class.

When you choose XanEdu to create a CoursePack, your account team will do all the leg work – identify the copyright holders, submit permissions requests, and manage the royalty payment process. You, or your college, will never be at risk of violating copyright law because we guarantee that 100% of the CoursePack content is completely cleared.

Convenience, Customer Service, and Cost Savings

With the expertise and connections to serve any curriculum—from Early Childhood to Secondary to Education Leadership—scrounging for articles and back-and-forth phone calls to copy centers can be a thing of the past. And XanEdu brings enhanced customer service, convenience, and cost-savings to your CoursePack experience, offering...

- A dedicated account service team to assemble CoursePacks and clear all copyrights. We work directly with faculty, or through department administrators or campus bookstore.
- Digital access ideal for distance learning, as well as traditional print CoursePacks or even a combination of print plus digital.
- Economical packs that can include articles, chapters, excerpts, and multimedia, saving students money while remaining copyright compliant.

XanEdu CoursePacks work in Blackboard and other course management systems, too!

Your mission is to prepare the best possible teachers, administrators, and counselors for the future. That's a mission we share. Engage these educators of tomorrow with a wide variety of the latest, most authoritative content in the field, all presented in the convenient, affordable medium of your choice.

Engage your students with XanEdu CoursePacks.
